

Consultation on plans to convert The Sixth Form College Solihull to an academy and for it to merge with Ninestiles Academy Trust

This survey is part of a consultation on proposed changes to The Sixth Form College Solihull and Ninestiles Academy Trust. The College intends to convert to an academy under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. The College would dissolve and transfer its property, rights and liabilities to Ninestiles Academy Trust. The proposed merger would create the first Multi-Academy-Trust of its kind in the country catering for children and young people aged three to 19.

NAMES AND ADDRESSES WITHHELD TO COMPLY WITH DATA PROTECTION LAWS

What is proposed?

In early 2015, Ninestiles Academy Trust and The Sixth Form College Solihull began discussing the possibility of a merger between the Trust and College.

NINESTILES ACADEMY TRUST

1. The stated aims of the merger are to enable the Trust and the College to:
- Offer superb opportunities for social mobility and academic success for all the communities of south-east Birmingham and Solihull
  - Boost both the aspirations and attainment of students
  - Give families confidence and continuity within an education experience that supports the development of their children at every crucial step
  - Enable visionary strategic investment as a result of the combined scale of both the Trust and the College
  - Provide greater access to specialist staff, facilities and curriculum that no individual school could sustain
  - Create a single organisation that benefits from extensive community, education and business links

1	09/02/17 10:02AM ID: 52233250	How does this affect the secondary school pupils not in this trust or classed as living in the south east Birmingham area?
2	20/02/17 11:53AM ID: 52731710	The aims are extremely broad and high level. This means that it is very hard to work out what the practical realities of the aims would be. However, there are some, such as the third bullet point, that potentially seeks to restrict the choice of pupils.
3	26/02/17 11:25AM ID: 53058767	As a parent of two children who were happy and successful at Ninestiles and unhappy at Solihull Sixth Form I would welcome a more cohesive education which is not characterised by a huge drop in pastoral care once they reach year 12. I am anxious for my third child not to repeat this experience when he leaves Ninestiles. Solihull Sixth Form has an excellent additional support team but this was, in my experience, only accessed once my daughter reached crisis point, from which she never fully recovered.
4	01/03/17 1:35PM ID: 53255206	I do not believe that a merger will result in the above assumed positive benefits.

5	02/03/17 2:08PM ID: 53342586	The identity of the SFCS as a distinct sixth form needs to be maintained - no uniform code or too much cross over with other years in terms of pupils or staff.

It will also offer local children the unique opportunity of accessing a learning pathway whilst remaining in one network of educational establishments from the first day of their academic experience aged three right up until they are 19 years old. 1	09/02/17 10:14AM ID: 52234088	There needs to be more schools in the Trust for this to truly thrive. At present I don't see many students coming through their entire school/college life in just Trust establishments.
2	09/02/17 5:26PM ID: 52269553	However, not all pupils who attend a Ninestiles school will be able to be in "one network of educational establishments from the first day of their academic experience", as location and catchment, as well as the schools available within the Ninestiles Trust restrict this.
3	09/02/17 7:50PM ID: 52276236	The idea of a 3 to 19 educational learning pathway is most useful
4	13/02/17 1:51PM ID: 52399270	Local? Erdington and Castle Vale are not local to Solihull or Yardley
5	16/02/17 3:33PM ID: 52553276	Although it may not suit every child / young person to remain in the same educational institution throughout their life.
6	20/02/17 11:53AM ID: 52731710	There may be instances where this may be beneficial to a pupil. However, a blanket approach to try and funnel all pupils from Ninestiles schools to a Solihull Sixth Form College will not work for all and appears to be based on finance.
7	01/03/17 1:35PM ID: 53255206	Again, I do not think that a merger will result in the above assumed positive benefits.
8	07/03/17 3:44PM ID: 53602449	didn't wanna read it
9	08/03/17 11:50AM ID: 53646196	But again, just because you are part of a group of schools, that doesn't guarantee consistency of learning environment or of educational experience. Again this is more vision rather than practicality.
10	08/03/17 4:03PM ID: 53666970	Being part of the same organisation as a range of feeder schools has clear benefits for the College in an increasingly competitive environment.

1	06/02/17 10:39PM ID: 52110181	Personally i have been fortunate enough to have gone to both a primary and secondary school that have joined the Ninestiles trust. So i've been able to see the contrast and have insight into a before and after situation. So i feel i can quite confidently say that i am fairly well versed on the matter. So at a primary school level, going the trust has not changed much, but for the most part, the changes have been positive. Now, i went to Ninestiles, so i was there when it became an academy and during the time i was there it did become stricter but it was at a level where both myself and my peers were comfortable and happy. I felt it was at an optimum level, however from what i have heard. So this is not based on personal experience, the academy has become even stricter to the point where many students really dislike going. Now, this may be the standard complaints that you get at any level of education at any institute but if it isn't and there are students even moderately unhappy with the fairness of their governing system then i don't feel it is very conducive to a healthy learning environment where students feel motivated. So what i feel, is that Solihull 6th form has been an outlet for both myself and many of my peers to express individuality and not feel like our true selves are being repressed. So my main worry in becoming an academy is that the open and warm atmosphere ,brought about by the freedom of expression we are given, will disappear and the college will become a monotone prison full of expressionless students. So only time will tell but i'm fortunate enough so that i wont be hear to witness it if it does go downhill.

	ID: 52234088	Governors must think of all the schools within the Trust, not just the College. I think each member of the Trust can learn from each other and share best practice, but it is still important that what makes each establishment unique is retained. For example, one staffing policy to fit every institution may not suit everyone. Flexibility must still remain.

14	20/02/17 11:53AM ID: 52731710	While there may be legitimate reasons for a merger, the proposal appears to be aiming to create an 'educational brand'. While this will most likely generate additional finance for the Turts, it is likely to have a negative impact on other schools and further/higher education providers.
15	26/02/17 11:25AM ID: 53058767	Whilst I realise as a student enters Year 12 they are entering a more mature phase of their education and need to learn independence, we now know the brain does not reach maturity until the mid 20s. Young people are in an extremely difficult stage in their life, the stress on them is enormous and I feel they need more support than is currently routinely given at Solihull Sixth Form. I would welcome a new structure for the college as this merger and a new head offers an ideal opportunity.
16	01/03/17 1:35PM ID: 53255206	My main concern is that the Ninestiles trust will asset strip the college and sell off the land. I would like there to be contractual clause to stop this from happening.

18	08/03/17 11:50AM ID: 53646196	I believe there was recently a Senior Management event at the Belfry. Was this paid for out of tax payer's money? Is this the kind of ethos and culture we can expect in the Trust - it certainly would not have been something the Sixth Form College would have financed. My fear is that in the super-structure that is the Trust, there will develop a Senior Management expectation of entitlement while rank and file staff are held down on austerity measures. This was my personal experience when I worked in FE and it created a toxic environment.
19	08/03/17 4:03PM ID: 53666970	I think the rationale behind the merger is sound.
20	10/03/17 11:22AM ID: 53777256	The whole thing is very unnerving
21	18/03/17 1:00PM ID: 54267865	I currently have one daughter studying at Solihull 6th form and another studying at Lyndon School in Solihull. Whilst the daughter who is currently at Solihull 6th form was well supported throughout her education at Lyndon (not under the Ninestiles Academy) the same cannot be said for my other daughter; as the school appear to be crying out for specialist teachers in some subjects. There are subject options not available to year 9 pupils for their GCSE'S due to this reason; I do not see this as 'improving the quality of teaching and educational outcomes' for the children and young people you serve in Solihull. I do not blame the teaching staff who are currently at Lyndon School A Ninestiles Academy but the way in which the school is now being managed. Therefore I am very concerned as to what this will mean for Solihull 6th form and it's future; a college with the drive to secure improvement and develop a harmonious learning culture and a strong emphasis on high expectations and aspirations. I do not currently have the confidence that this will continue and grow.
